Early Monday, an 18-21 years old man was shot dead at a DART light rail station.

The shooting took place at around 12:20 a.m., at the Deep Ellum Station off North Good Latimer.

According to reports from the Dallas police officers, some kind of argument involving several people ended up at the station once the train stopped. All of a sudden, a man pulled out his handgun and shot a man in the head multiple times to death.

When the responding officers arrived at the scene, they found the man dead on the platform.

Officers are investigating into the matter and trying to find out what happened between these people that lead to shooting death of a man. There are surveillance cameras at the station platform and officers will check them and hopefully come up with the suspect soon.
