

Dallas: "To Be Like Me"™ -New program teaches kids to interact with disabled people

Posted by Sumit | December 08, 2019

"To Be Like Me"™-New Program in Dallas to teach kids how to interact with people with special needs will help break down stereotypes. This will be a two-hour interactive experience for kids where they will get a chance to interact with people with special needs. This is a free program that has been booked up through the end of the school year.

À

It is an integral part of curriculum teaching kids compassion and understanding.

À

Fourth graders of University Park Elementary School are learning how to interact with people who are disabled.

This program is taught at the Tolleson Family Activity Center in Dallas. A free community event that starts in February.
